What changed over the period?
In the 1950s Cuba had been a capitalist country, largely under the control of big American companies who owned much of the farmland. Initially, Castro's Cuban Revolution was not particularly communist, they wanted to have more control over their own country and be able to use the land to make money for the Cuban people. This sudden revolution scared the American leadership and as a result they pushed them away, right into the arms of the waiting Soviet Union, who traded heavily with Cuba after an American trade embargo. When the USSR placed missiles there in 1962, the Cuban Missile Crisis created a very real threat of nuclear war. Ultimately, war didn't happen, and this fact actually paved the way for the two sides to start interacting with each other, as it became clear that neither really wanted a nuclear war.

Always Remember...
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Cuban Revolution frightened the Americans. It was so close to their borders and by refusing to do business with the new regime they actually pushed the Cubans into the arms of the USSR. The Vietnam War was hotting up in the early 1960s. By 1964, troops who had been sent there as American 'military advisers' to the South Vietnamese were starting to complete combat missions, dragging the Americans into a long, bloody war, which they could not win. Détente, the idea that the relationship between East and West was improving, was partly caused as neither side could continue to spend such huge sums of money on weapons.
